

Is your homeschool curriculum culturally responsive?

- Does the curriculum expose your learners to a group of diverse authors, characters, identities, and cultures?
.....
- Are people of different cultures, skin tones, and abilities central to the stories being presented?
.....
- Do the characters accurately reflect the histories and experiences of their cultures?
.....
- Are the characters portrayed in non-stereotypical ways?
.....
- Does the curriculum encourage students to connect to their real-life experiences, communities, and cultures?
.....
- Are there references to different cultural traditions, languages, religions, names, and clothing?
.....
- Are diverse family structures (i.e, single parents, adopted or foster children, same-sex parents, other relatives living with the family, etc.) represented?
.....
- Are characters with disabilities represented?
.....
- If there is conflict in the storyline, are the characters of color not mostly considered the problem?
